President’s Message

The pastor of a small congregation in Gainesville decided not to burn a Quran (or a whole pile of them) after everyone, even Sara Palin, told him it was a bad idea. He went off to New York to try to persuade the imam not to build a muslim (and interfaith) center. He didn't seem to accomplish much but he held a “Christian” service there and is now asking his followers to send lots of money to pay for his outing.

The writer of a letter to the Times suggested that we should be burning the Quran since “they” burn the American flag which he said was the symbol of our country and religion.

The second is the one that upset me most. Goodness knows that if he wants to worship a few strips of colored cloth, he has a right to do so, but he shouldn't think that everyone shares his passion. I expect he's one of the many who, when presented with the text of the first amendment are horrified and want it deleted.

If you ever feel complacent in your freedom of belief remember the many people who think what you believe is terrible and should be banned.
